M. E. CHURCH HEARS BISHOP HUGHES

His Sunday Morning's Sermon Was Indeed Masterpiece

Bishop Hughes' sermon at the M. E. Church Sunday morning was a masterpiece. His text was taken from 1 Thess. 4:15, "Comfort One Another."

He stated that when Jesus said He would send the Comforter He used precisely the same expression that Paul used in the text above. From that he drew the conclusion that we are to live Holy Spirit lives. Since the spirit is the biggest part of the man we should have a spiritual attitude toward one another but that most people had a material attitude. He illustrated this point by saying that if we should read in the morning paper that one man had the night before come into possession of half a million dollars and that another man had accepted Christ and through doing this had come into possession of eternal life the great majority of us would congratulate the man who had come into the possession of the material wealth. Within fifty years, he said, most of us will lose what material wealth we may now have. It will pass into the possession of some other man, but the man who has a claim of life eternal will hold that claim forever and forever.

His second point was that we should also have a comforting attitude toward one another. Some men must have their hearts broken before they can amount to anything or be of service to their fellow man. I like Barnabas although he is hidden in the shadow of the great Paul. His name was changed from Joses to Barnabas because he was the son of consolation and comfort. Many a time a person hungers only for sympathy. A little girl was found by one of her playmates sobbing bitterly. Her mother had died and the little girl in her loneliness had left her other playmates and was found with her head upon the desk, crying. Her little friend put her arm around the neck of the child who was weeping, lay her head beside that of her playmate and in sympathy for her went too. "Mamma," she said, "when I did that she felt better. Why?" She asked a question which has puzzled psychologists but nevertheless discovered a truth.

In being like the Holy Spirit we can also convict men of righteousness, judgment, etc., in our sphere. We can hold up good ideals rather than rebuking too often and thus guide people into truth. In concluding the enumeration of the offices of the Holy Spirit he said that we too could show men things to come. Now, he said, think I have come to a stone wall? Will we right this time too and I will prove it. He related two points that illustrated his point very vividly. A few years ago in Boston, Mass., a young man came into his study and after a short conversation he detected the smell of liquor on the young man's breath, whereupon he said, calling the young man by name: "I know your father is a drunkard and that your mother too drinks but always believed that you did not drink. Stop it now or in a few years you will be in a drunkard's grave. Three years after he smothered out his wretched life in the river." The second was likewise the story of a young man but it illustrated the other side of the question. This young man's ideals were high and his life clean. He predicted for him that he would soon be the head man in his business, a leading man in town and be prominent in the church. This had been fulfilled in almost every detail and although the young man was not yet at the top in his business he was well up the ladder and still climbing.

If you are like the Holy Spirit you will glorify Jesus for that was the office of the Holy Spirit. If I hear a man using the name of the Holy Spirit continually and leaving out the name of Christ I know that man has not yet learned all that he may know about the Holy Spirit. His illustration of this point was especially striking. There are two great lights that light the world, the greater is the sun, the lesser, the moon. You sit on your lawn on a moonlight night and enjoy the beauty of the scene but the moon is the central attraction of it all. The moon glorifies herself and not the landscape to any great extent. How different with the sun. This morning some of you had a sunrise Punch
